BUENOS AYRES, SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1842.

[YEAR XVI.]

BUENOS AYRES.

Dear Sir, We regret the week nothing of importance respecting the movements of the army has been made public, if we except the surprise and dispersion of a body of some 300 of the Santafesinos near the Rosario, in which they lost a number of killed and prisoners, and left in possession of the Argentine forces from 170 to 250 fine horses. It is further reported that Colonel Andrade has surprised and cut to pieces a group of Indians.

Anniversary of the Birth-day of H. E. the Governor Brigadier General Juan Manuel de Rosas.

This anniversary occurred on the 30th ult., upon which day H. E. the Governor Brigadier General Juan Manuel de Rosas completed his forty-ninth year. Considerable demonstrations took place in Buenos Ayres upon the occasion—the public offices and the town were on the 29th and 30th decorated with flags, and illuminated on the evenings of those days. On the 30th at dawn of day a salute of 21 guns was fired from the Retiro. At mid-day and at sunset salutes were fired from the Fort and from the National vessels of war General Echagüe and the schooner (late Molleska). H. E. during the day received the congratulations of various civil and military officers and others at his private residence, at which place in the evening there was a tertulia which was numerously attended. In the course of the evening two effigies, one in their representing Juan Pablo Lopez, and the other José María Paz, were burnt according to public notice in the street Restaurador Rosas. They were suspended from ropes and consumed amid loud shouts. The fire works were really splendid—in one of their transformations they exhibited in a blaze of light the words Viva el Restaurador de las Leyes! Muera los salvajes unitarios!

Three military bands of music were stationed near the scene of operations, and their performances gave infinite pleasure to the numerous throng of both sexes which had assembled to witness the proceedings.

The day was observed as a holiday, and the Diario de la Tarde was not published.

FASHION WEEK.

The solemnities usual to the season were this year upon an extensive scale in Buenos Ayres—at least the throng of both sexes which attended the solemn trophies and the processions there was more dense than at other times—this in some measure might be attributed to the extreme fineness of the weather. In the processions through the streets, the images of our Saviour, the Virgin, St. John, &c., were borne, with the customary clerical attendants, infantry soldiers, music, tapers, &c.

On 'Holy Thursday,' (24th ult.) the government procession, in which was the civil and military authorities, visited the Seven Churches, the person of the Governor being represented by Don Manuel Insiarte Minister of Finance. Crowds in mourning attire traversed the streets and attended the Churches. Altars were erected in several districts and pulpits from which orations were delivered. The music (vocal and instrumental) which was wont to be performed at the College Church on the evening of Holy Thursday, was upon the present occasion transferred to the Cathedral, the High Altar of which was splendidly lit and decorated, and Bishop Medrano officiated at the head of the clergy. At mid-day the colours of the Fort Marínoff and the vessels of Catholic nations in the harbour were hoisted half-mast and yards crossed.

On 'Good Friday,' the Cathedral was the great point of attraction. Immense crowds filled to overflowing that noble edifice, drawn thither by the fame of Father Majano, to whom it was known had been assigned the charge of delivering there the Sermon de Atonia. Those who were present have assured us that this truly exemplary and learned clergyman fully maintained the distinguished character for eloquence, classical purity of diction, and fascinating manner of delivery—for which he has long been justly celebrated.

On Saturday at mid-day, the firing from the Fort, the bells of the Churches, music and discharges of rockets, announced the resurrection. The colours were run up to the mast head, yards squared, &c. At night a Judas representing José María Paz was burnt in the Plaza de la Victoria. It had balls affixed to its legs in allusion to the manner in which the individual in question was killed in the Province of Cordova on the 10th of May 1831, when in command of the unitarian army there. It held in its right hand a paper bearing the following inscription—

Soy el boledo Paz.*

On Sunday evening, Judases representing José María Paz, Juan Pablo Lopez and Fructuoso Rivera, were burnt in front of the Victoria Theatre, in the Plaza de Monserrat, Plaza Nueva, Alameda, &c. &c. The rockets announcing these events were continually streaming in the air.

The Judas on the Alameda was suspended on a gibbet, and represented Juan Pablo Lopez.—When it fell therefrom, half consumed, the boys as usual made a rush to seize the burning fragments, but were not permitted by the police.

The fire-works at these Judas burning exhibitions were excellent, and the spectators numerous—the nights being fine and moonlit.

The following was published in the daily papers.

Viva la Federación!

Rosas, Independencia ó Muerte!

Muera los salvajes esquivos unitarios!
The officers and soldiers of the 1st Battalion of Volunteers Rebajados in celebration of the anniversary of the birth-day of H. E. the Governor Our Illustrious Restaurador of the Laws Brigadier General Juan Manuel de Rosas, after having offered up thanks to the Almighty, through the medium of a solemn Mass and Te Deum at the Church of Nuestra Señora de la Piedad, on an event so auspicious for our country, and for ourselves, invite all federals both male and female to assemble on the evening of the 1st of April, in front of the barracks of the battalion, to witness the burning of two effigies—one representing the odious unitarian malatto robber Fructuoso Rivera—the other bearing on one side the representation of the infamous traitor and may bestia miscreant unitarian Juan Pablo Lopez (alias Mascareilla), and on the other the notorious salvaje unitario nanco José María Paz.

On Saturday afternoon last H. E. the Governor Don Juan Manuel de Rosas, passed the Alameda on horseback on his way to his quarters. He was attended by an Aid-de-Camp and two orderlies. The daughter of H. E. Doña Manuela (also on horseback) followed shortly afterwards attended by a groom.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BRITISH PACKET.

Sir,

Although when money is lost and gone, it little imports how or why, the following extract of a letter from England cannot fail to be interesting to those engaged in the Wool Trade of this country, and perchance its publicity may bring about an amendment in the management, or rather the mismanagement, so feelingly criticised by one of the many sufferers therefrom—

By giving it a berth in your next Packet, you will oblige,

A Wool Grower.

Constant occupation has prevented my addressing you before. Since my arrival, I have found the value of wool far lower, than I have ever known it to be in this country, constant failures in the Woolen districts and the large quantities of South Australian and other wools coming forward occasioning the standard value of that commodity to be very much reduced.—The manner of transacting wool business in Liverpool beats certainly everything in the shape of commercial humbug, that has hitherto come to my notice. The wools, that may arrive are mainly placed in the hands, say warehouse of one broker, in consequence of which no competition to get the highest price is possible, as no other broker has access to the merchandise. What is the consequence; the Commission merchant the consignee, who overburdened with a variety of business and perhaps into the bargain is totally unacquainted with the value of the wool, is made the dupe of a cunning "Yorkshire" broker, and the consigning parties on the other side are the losers. In London, all wools are stored in light and spacious Public Warehouses, to which every broker in the trade is admitted; in Liverpool, the warehouses are as dark as cellars, and the buyers in company with the broker inspect press-packed bales by the bright light of one tallow candle, the lustre of which is considerably diminished by the unclean panes of glass of the battens, which contains the same. The floor where my bales are stored has two small doors, which afford sufficient light to inspect about a dozen bales "comme il faut," as to the remainder they are in a position so dark that you cannot see your hand before your eyes—add to this the prejudice of the buyers to River Plate wool, the advantageous position of the broker towards the buyer, by virtue of the position in which the selling merchant is placed by the custom of the place, besides a fair allowance of fault finding on part of the buyers, which the broker is sure to confirm, and you will be able to form an idea of what the result, alas the "Net Proceeds" must be. Out of the invisible bales two or three handfuls of wool are plucked and carried to the light, and this is the criterion by which perhaps a lot of 25 bales is judged! I was shown samples of your wools and informed of prices they fetched, unfortunately before dinner, as the broker made my wools out far inferior and led me to infer an awful result. I fear that consignment must have left you a heavy loss; let people say what they like, these wools would have obtained a far better price in London, had they been placed there in proper time. Your exposure of this most consumptive expose to our mutual friends will oblige me.

The Members of a Deputation from the West Riding of Yorkshire, appointed to confer with Her Majesty's government, on the part of the operatives of that district, have published a Report of their interview with Sir Robert Peel. The following is a portion of it which we have copied from an article in 'The Times' of December 31, 1841.

"We are sick of party nicknames, and party contentions, for party purposes. We are sick of the everlasting confusion and bad feeling arising from these contentions, and are prepared to award our confidence, support, and gratitude, to any government, or set of men, no matter what their party name may be, who will show by their actions that they sympathize with our wrongs and our sufferings, and are honestly desirous of removing them. We approve of the course you have pursued since your accession to power; and especially in your readiness to take time for the consideration and maturity of the measures on which you may resolve. We have had too much of legislation which can only be fitly characterized as being from 'hand to mouth,' and we are, therefore, willing that you should have all the time which may be requisite to enable you to decide both what measures are necessary, and how they may be most beneficially carried into effect. But, perfectly willing that some time should be accorded to you, we shall expect, Sir, that measures of real substantial justice will be the result.

"You, Sir Robert, are now placed in the most important and commanding position of any individual in Europe, perhaps in the world. At the head of a strong government, with a powerful majority in the Commons, and an influential portion of the population thinking with you—unfettered, as you have declared yourself to be, save by your own convictions of what is right and useful—the resources of an empire on which the sun is said never to set, an empire unparalleled in its natural and artificial appliances, at your command—and a population whose enterprise, industry, and genius are proverbial, looking up to you—a grave, an awful responsibility rests upon you. The means for producing national wellbeing are superabundant; the population is but limited. Broad and comprehensive views, vigorous and decided action, are all called for—the exigencies of the times, and we earnestly hope that such a course will be pursued.

The report concludes (add.) 'The Times' by saying that 'the impression left on the minds of every one of the Deputation on retiring was, that Sir R. Peel is fully aware of the head with which he is laboring, and that he is working classes. It is but fair to add, that the emphatic words which dropped from the lips of one of the members of the Deputation, after they withdrew—'Well, at all events, it is clear that Sir Robert Peel has a heart,' conveyed the unanimous feeling of all.

At the request of a lady residing in Buenos Ayres, we insert the following:

Guidhall, London, November 13, 1841.

Joseph Jones, a tailor, about 25 years of age, with a profusion of hair combed down in long straight locks, was brought before Sir Peter Laurie, charged with being drunk and disorderly in Fleet-street.

Policeman 362 stated that the prisoner assaulted several persons by striking them over the head with a blue bag containing a pair of trousers. He struck women as well as men, and drew blood from the nose of some. The women, in return, had a tug at his side-locks, but no person now attended to complain.

Sir Peter Laurie was not surprised that he was charged with striking females, for he took persons who wore their hair in that manner to be capable of doing anything. None could make a man look more contemptible than this womanish fashion of letting the hair grow till it reached the shoulders. He supposed the prisoner wished to be mistaken for a German student.

The prisoner, in excuse for his conduct, said he was rather fresh.

Sir Peter Laurie said he would fine him 5s. for being tipsy, but if he would cut off his hair he would forgive him.

The prisoner bowed, stepped down from the bar, and immediately sent for a barber, who very speedily arrived, and performed the operation of cropping. The groom then put the prisoner to the bar, to show that he had brought himself within the allowed exemption from fine.

Sir Peter Laurie told the prisoner he now looked much better, more like a man, more like a respectable member of the community. He asked if he did not feel more comfortable.

"Very much so," replied the tailor.

Sir Peter Laurie said he had not adjudged the prisoner to have his hair cut off, but merely suggested it. It would not be amiss, however, if all the young men who wore long side-locks, and were caught drunk, were shorn before they got sober. Since journeyman tailors could so exactly imitate the hair of the West-end, the latter would be obliged to drop it, lest they should be mistaken for journeyman tailors.

The barber then demanded his fee for attending a gentleman, &c.

Sir Peter Peel said the demand from his own pocket, and said he never paid a shilling with greater delight, and he should be happy to pay for the cropping of all that would submit to be divested of their disgustingly long hair. He had, he believed, put an end to the custom of continuing a prisoner sent to criminals himself, and the Magistrates now cautioned him that what he said would be taken down. He hoped he had put down the fashion of coming from all parts of the metropolis to commit suicide at Buckfitts-bridge, by the Old Bailey—a custom which had been followed by Sir Chapman Marshall and by Mr. Barrell. He should be highly gratified if he could also put down the unmanly custom of wearing long hair.

The 'Atlas' of 20th November, under the head 'Sir Peter Laurie's Utilities,' contains the following remarks upon the above—

If our London police reports are not so remarkable for the garish of sentiment as those of the French, our police are more forcible. We have the decided advantage on the grotesque side of the comparison. One great source of our superiority in this respect may be referred to the great liberty we possess of getting drunk. The French seldom enjoy themselves up to that point of bliss when the translated soul revels in an elysium of wretched knockers and broken windows. Out of this single item alone the police sheets present us every morning with a fund of comicities—sometimes having a dash of serious colouring in them to heighten and throw out their effects. We have a case of pure fun before us, with a justice's speech flowing out of it, and shadowing it all over with gravity.

There was a tailor last week of the name of Joseph Jones, of twenty-five years of age, brought before Sir Peter Laurie at the Guildhall, for having been drunk the night before, and for humorously assailing sundry men and women with a blue bag containing a pair of trousers. This lively tailor, it seems, had a profusion of long hair, which he wore hanging over his shoulders.

Joseph Jones's hair attracted the attention of the justice even more than his bag and its midnight adventures. His worship declared that he believed people who wore their hair in that manner were "capable of doing any thing." He supposed, however, that the law wished to be mistaken for a German student; to which Jones replied that "he [not the justice, but Jones] was rather fresh." Whereupon—

Sir Peter Laurie said he would fine him 5s. for being tipsy, but he would cut off his hair he would forgive him.

The prisoner bowed, stepped down from the bar, and immediately sent for a barber, who very speedily arrived, and performed the operation of cropping.

"Now," says Sir Peter, "do you not feel yourself more comfortable?" "Very much so," replied the doctor. Sir Peter, after observing that "it would not be amiss" if all drunken young men with long locks were shorn before they got sober, (rather a perilous experiment in some cases), paid the barber's fee of 1s. out of his own pocket, adding that "he never paid a shilling with greater delight, and he would be happy to pay for the cropping of all that would submit to be disfigured of their disgusting long hair." Upon the faith of this public announcement we hereby invite every poor man who cannot afford a barber at his own cost to repair without delay to the Guildhall, where he will get his hair expeditiously cut gratis.

But mark the "moral" of this case. Joseph Jones gets drunk, and assaults the passengers in a public street, for which offence he is carried before a justice. Happily for Jones he has "disgusting long hair," and the justice, being peculiarly susceptible, on that point, promises to remit the usual fine of 5s. for being drunk, and all its attendant delinquencies, provided he will suffer his superfluous locks to be cut off. Jones jumps at the proposal, gets his hair cut at the justice's expense, and is dismissed with congratulations on being very much more comfortable than he was before.

It is quite clear that if Jones had not been distinguished from the common mob of drunken tailors by the length of his hair, there would not have existed the excuse for remitting the fine; and that his profuse locks not only saved him from the payment of a penalty of 5s., but actually procured for him the useful services of a barber at the expense of the magistrate. We know not how Sir Peter Laurie can refuse similar favours in future to drunken men with long hair. Any journeyman tailor, or other person, therefore, who wishes to get his superabundant curls clipped for nothing, has only to get tipsy in Sir Peter Laurie's district, and the thing is done.

Drunkenness is fumble by law, at the magistrate's discretion; long hair is not. But long hair covers the offence of drunkenness, and earns a gratuity into the bargain. This is Sir Peter's decision. Are there any other fanciful offences commutable into rewards by the same agency? Let us have a police tariff of the long-hair drawbacks.

Having discharged Jones, Sir Peter took occasion to recite some other points of magisterial sagacity he had developed in his time, leading the way to a very sensible reform in the police courts of the metropolis. As he had in this instance exposed the "womanish fashion" of wearing bunches of unnecessary hair, so he had in former cases put a stop to other absurdities not less preposterous.

The Gazette of Monday last contains details of various donations made to the government in aid of the war against the unitarians, with a note to the Governor Don Juan Manuel de Rosas, dated San Andres de Giles 2nd ult., from the Regulatory Committee of Capitals of that district, of which the following is a copy.

EXCELLENCE SIR,

The undersigned having terminated their official duties, and desirous of contributing all in their power in aid of the just war against the recreant leathome odious unitarians, until the complete extermination of that race of infernal wretches, and the entire annihilation of the intransigent bandit mulatto Rivera who so treacherously oppress the Oriental State of the Uruguay and provoked our Argentine Confederation to war, trust that Y. E. will be pleased to accept the donation which they make in aid of the State, the sum assigned to them by law, as a proof of their adhesion to the illustrious person of Y. E., and of their implacable hatred to the mulatto incendiary Rivera and his satellites the recreant unitarians.

God preserve the important life of Y. E. many years.

Yesterday was "April Fool Day," and it was not forgotten in Buenos Ayres—many were the dapes to this ancient custom—had numerous visitors enquiring for letters, newspapers, &c., some of whom went away laughing at the jest put upon them, whilst others seemed disappointed.

MYSTERIOUS PROFESSION.—"Now, Tom," said the printer of a country newspaper, in giving directions to his apprentice, "Put the 'Foreign Leaders' into the galley, and lock 'em up—let 'Napoleon's Romans' have a large head—distribute the 'Army in the East'—take up a line of music the 'British Ministry'—make 'The young Princess' to run on with 'The Duchess of Kent'—move 'The Kerry Hunt' out of the chase'—get your stoc and conclude 'The Horrid Murder' that Joe began last night with your hands and come in to dinner—and then see that all the pie is cleared up!"
