

out for the purpose of curing a supply of provisions at the expense of these islands. The only way to prevent this piracy, which would be of immense benefit to the nation, would be by stationing on the spot one or two small, swift, and well-armed cutters, rigged as ketches, under a commander whose constant duty would be to cruise along the lighted-igniter-galley, but a portion of the crew would be employed in erecting buildings for government, in planting gardens, and making preparations for colonization either partial or otherwise. The extent of the territory to be acquired, says our commander, is not less than two second months, twenty able-bodied men, ten muskets, and sixteen others—all, sixty. These officers and men could easily navigate an archipelago of this number of straits and a secure protection to the whole islands.

It is believed that these islands are frequently made use of by fraudulent persons in the same manner as the Bahama Islands, and that the Indians see that to say, ships are purposely left there to be wrecked, and the crews are taken in the most unaccountable manner. In several instances ships thus lost are seen to have been wrecked in the most unaccountable manner. In several instances ships thus lost are seen to have been wrecked in the most unaccountable manner. In several instances ships thus lost are seen to have been wrecked in the most unaccountable manner.

The undersigned had great horns by the Falklands, tempter fraudulent adventurers, who were people in general well informed as to the admiralty and safe ports in these islands, the utmost surprise would be expressed at ships being lost there. As it is the unpunished practice of some of the crews of a comfortable wreck; preserves his life and as many private stores as he may think necessary; loudly trumpet forth the dangerous nature of the islands; and thus drama and silence suspension. From the enormous number of vessels in this direction, the author ventures to predict that the underwriters in the world will be completely flooded in insuring vessels round the Horn, and that the islands will be incessantly covered of being the cause; but that asserts that the well-found, well-manned ship need be lost on the Falklands.

As a corroboration of the apparently unaccountable increase of animals on these islands, the following is quoted from the narrative of a voyage by Lopez in 1516, published in the third volume of "Peregrinations and Travels of all men." Don Juan Ponce de Leon, behind him, there were but 500 left alive, who, in his ship's tow, were the river.
